There are two Stories about the origin of the Daiquiri. One says that it was invented by a barman in Havana, Cuba, in the early 1900s. The other maintains that the cocktail was named after the town of Daiquiri, Cuba, where it supposedly originated in 1898, when the town's doctors used local rum as malaria medicine. To make the dose taste better, American engineers who were working for a local mining company added lime juice and sugar to the rum.

NOTE:

Carbonated water originally developed in the eighteenth century to emulate naturally sparkling mineralwater.

Later it was found that this water was the most effective and palatable medium in which to give quinine medicine to british servicemen in india, who were at risk for contracting malaria.

Thus "indian tonic water" was born. It wasn't long before the british army officers, who found gin an indispensable antidote to the tropical heat, began mixing tonic water with gin creating one of the most famous mixed drinks in the world.
